We're interested in how people think about adult children's obligations to provide care for aging parents.

We'll describe 3 different situations on the pages that follow. Each situation involves an adult child with an aging parent. We'll then ask you what you think about the care provided by the adult child to the aging parent in each situation.

Please read each description carefully and consider the circumstances of both the adult child and the aging parent. Your answers are extremely important to us.

Some healthy people join research studies about Alzheimer disease. These studies help researchers better understand Alzheimer disease and develop treatments for the disease.

Participation in these studies typically involves a 2-3 hour interview at a medical center where the participant tells their medical history, completes tests of memory and thinking, gives a blood sample, and has a physical exam. A friend or family member of the study participant also completes an interview about the participant. These interviews and tests are repeated every year, for 10 or more years. Study participants are paid $50 for each yearly interview.

Please indicate how much you agree or disagree with each of the following statements.
